Historical reconstruction of 1861

- Barrel adjusted to the butt by two steel bands
- the fittings are made of brass
- the butt is walnut
- delivered with a CD / DVD of the house + specific instructions for black powder and cartridge weapons

The British military rifle Enfield Pattern 1853 is a rifle musket (black powder rifle, single shot, loading by the mouth, rifled barrel and fired by capsules of mercury fulminate) produced by the Royal Arsenal of Enfield (and industrial subcontractors) between 1853 and 1867.

This model, also known as Enfield Pattern 1853 Rifle-Musket, Pattern 1853 Enfield, P53 Enfield, and Enfield Rifle-Musket is, like the rifles fitted to several powers of the time, a derivative of the French Minié rifle of 1850. It replaces the famous Brown Bess musket and will be transformed into a breech-loading Snider-Enfield rifle.
